ofter fourteen years' continuous service.

The following special dispatch to the American from Norfolk gives full details of the merging of the Landmark with the Virginian-Pilot:

"The simultaneous editorial publication announcing the absorption of the Norfolk Landmark by the Virginian-Pilot, which is expected within twenty-four hours, will close what is generally recognized as a one-sided and losing fight the former paper has been emgaged in for the last eighteen months. It was for the supremacy of the Norfolk morning newspaper field. The official announcement of the merger, confirming the widespread reports, is understood to be hanging fire only because of the absence from the olty of Charles S. Abell, of Baltimore, the recognized owner of the purchased publication. It is accepted here as a fact that the deal for the merger went through-several weeks ago.

"Mr. Abell purchased the Landmark from a stock company, headed by local men. It is understood that it cost him $120,000 for the plant and good will.

"The cost of improvements in race to catch up with its rival prove be a losing game. In vain the Land-mark jumped into the Monday morning page. The final publication of the Landmark is scheduled for December 31.

"The Norfolk Landmark is the oldest existing paper in Norfolk. It was established forty years ago by James Barron Hope, a distinguished man of letters in Eastern Virginia, and was conducted by him throughout his life. When Mr. Hope died the paper passed into the hands of a stock company, headed bp S. S. Nottingham, and for years continued the conservative and quiet policy. It was always successful. The paper was in hundreds of households for these reasons.

"With the change eighteen moaths ago, while Mr. Nottingham was retained in an advisory capacity, new policies pertained in its management, and under these it failed to prove a success."

At the time Mr. Abell purchased the paper it was credited with a circulation of 7,500. The Virginian-Pilot was then credited with a circulation of 15,000 for its daily issue and 16,000 for its Sunday issue. Both are Democratic papers.
